For example, the data is a fixed width file and I have separated values into columns. I want a pandas.DataFrame that contains separate columns for each value that is not 0x00, so my resulting frame would look something like this: str_0123_str_4567_str_8901 *0x01 23 - 0x44 45 - 0x89 01

I am trying to check if a value passed to a function is not null. i know this: if a: print('I am null') else: print('It was not null') But how can I do the same thing with the following: try: a=functools.partial(my_partial_function,a) except: print('It was not null') Is there some way to do that? I am trying to make a DRY function that does not depend on a variable. The variable should be substituted or in the case of None it should do nothing. I am looking for something like this: def my_partial_function(a, b=None): print("I am null for %s" % a) if b is not None: b.do_something() A: you just need to use fun 3da54e8ca3
